Dear Medical Directors, Nursing Leaders, Pharmacy Leaders, Patient Advocates, Right Care Enthusiasts, and Clinical Quality Improvement Leaders:

The Right Care learning community has grown in terms of not only participants and national reach, but also in the range of topics to include SARS CoV-2, cardiovascular dementia, and heart failure in addition to our traditional focus on heart attacks, strokes, and complications of diabetes.

We are grateful to have successfully pivoted University of Best Practices to the virtual setting during the pandemic emergency. In 2020, we have continued to hold 2-3 meetings per month lasting anywhere from 2-4.5 hours, in addition to video leadership meetings from across the state (42 hours of programming). Judging by our greater attendance of high level health system leaders in our virtual University of Best Practices format, it has become a valued shared support system.

As our healthcare workers have faced exhaustion and emotional stress during the pandemic crisis, those involved in the Right Care learning community have found collaborating with their colleagues by video in Right Care leadership discussions and University of Best Practices an important emotional support system that provides encouragement and inspiration for powering through the incredibly intense pandemic workload.

World-class experts have presented in our virtual forum about cardiovascular and diabetes management as critical for understanding Covid-19 survivability. The Right Care learning community’s emphasis in the last 14 years on improving hypertension, cholesterol, and blood sugar control across our communities turns out to be very important in the Covid-19 era. Recent observational evidence indicates that patients who are effectively treated for these conditions in conjunction with Covid-19 therapeutics have less severe outcomes.

Practical presentations such as deploying electronic medical records and a data warehouse approach to systemically find and reach out to high risk patients have proven timely in assisting health systems and clinical teams in their need to quickly pivot to strategies such as telehealth and sharing best practices for doing so.

Thankfully, we were able to learn together about cardiovascular and diabetes co-morbidities that put CVD and DM patients at increased risk for death and disability from this deadly virus. We've also learned about innovative treatments, tools, and approaches to improve outcomes through improved risk prediction, proactive patient outreach, and clinical management enhanced through telemedicine.

We are so appreciative of your many efforts to improve care to help save lives. We hope that you continue to enjoy these dynamic learning sessions that are designed to help health systems and care teams to successfully adapt to the pandemic emergency and turn the tide on the number of lives lost. We are optimistic that our learning community will find the same successes in the treatment of Covid-19 as we have in the treatment of chronic diseases.

Please see the photos below capturing some of our best practices sharing activities. Thank you for all that you do in this fight to reduce premature deaths and disabilities from heart attacks, strokes, diabetic complications, heart failure, and SARS CoV-2 and for collaborating to share best practices! Over the last 14 years, we have built a strong, collaborative, and dedicated community to support a systemic approach for health systems to better manage the greatest killers of cardiovascular disease and diabetes. Please see our leadership and community in action in the photos below.

About the University of Best Practices (UBP)
The Right Care University of Best Practices is a collaborative public-private effort to reduce the ravages of diabetes as well as cardiovascular disease. We focus on the control measures of blood pressure, lipids and blood sugar as priorities to prevent and better manage heart disease, strokes and diabetic complications. This quality improvement effort, operated by the UC Berkeley School of Public Health, was publicly launched with the Department of Managed Health Care, NCQA and the Deans of UC Berkeley and UCLA Schools of Public Health in 2007 to improve patient outcomes for all patients in all delivery systems, from large integrated health systems, to medical groups, health plans, community clinics, the V.A., military medicine, minute clinics, pharmacies, etc.

The University of Best Practices provides an opportunity for medical, pharmacy and health care quality leaders, along with public health officials, to collaborate around learning from both successful approaches (and those that were unsuccessful) to approve regional outcomes. Each meeting will feature speakers with knowledge and experience achieving benchmark outcomes, as well as opportunities for strategic discussion.
